“Pathways to the Seminole Nation
- A Heritage Tour”

Deep in the interior of the Everglades where the sawgrass prairies give way to the Big Cypress, you will find the proud heartland of the Seminole Nation. We invite you to discover with us, amidst the haunting natural beauty of this remote place, the history and traditions of the never-conquered Seminole people.

Our first stop is at the Ah-Tah-Thi-Ki Museum (To Learn in the Seminole language) where we will examine rare artifacts that show how Seminole ancestors lived in the Florida swamps and Everglades during the late 1800s. Drawing us outside of the museum, which is set in a beautiful 60-acre cypress dome, will be the nature trail winding feet above the water's surface, to a Seminole village where arts and crafts are demonstrated and great stories are retold.

At Sam Jones Camp, recreated for and named after the medicine man and leader who led the Seminole resistors in the second Seminole War, you may try to coax the village elders into identifying the location of the next Green Corn Ceremony. But good luck because this remains an abiding secret that the Seminoles have kept from prying eyes for over a century.

Down the scenic trail a ways, our mode of transportation transforms dramatically as we board airboats that will take us around hardwood hammocks and sloughs in search of deer, wild hogs, hawks, eagles and other native species. Of course alligators are quite common - there are even Florida panthers in the area.
